1. Introduction

This section should generally aim to provide context by discussing relevant literature, summarizing the problem, and explaining the rationale and potential outcomes of the study. The introduction should end with a clear statement of the purpose and objectives to help readers understand the evolution, importance, and critical aspects of the study. Try to avoid figure, table, etc in this section.

2.3 Characterization Methodology with Full Details

3. Results

This section contains an in-depth presentation of the outcomes of the study. Results can be presented in text, figures, tables, etc. Place figures and tables at the middle of the page. Figure titles should be below the figures and table titles should appear above the tables.
